Summary : Multitasking

Multitasking is the process of doing tasks rapidly with the brain juggling from one task to another in quick succession. Some examples of multitasking are watching television while cooking food and talking while driving. Multitasking is possible for highly practised tasks. ~~But~~ On the other hand, for tasks which involve our brain more, it is difficult to multitask. We humans find it difficult to carry out two or more tasks which are related which in turn causes brain overload. David E Meyer, director of the 'Brain' at University of Michigan has stated that humans can never overcome inherent limitations of the brain in processing information.
